THE COVER: Portrait photographer Yousuf Karsh's study of David Hostetler and his sculpture is one of a series of black-and-white and color photographs made on the Hostetler farm near Athens. The Karsh photographs currently are on display with Hostetler's "women" in the Edna Hibel Gallery in Boston. Karsh's comments on Hostetler are on page 3, and coverage of the Hostetler-Karsh show in Naples, Fla., last spring is on pages 4 and 5.

The photograph at right and those on pages 1 and 2 were taken by Lois Siegel, '68.

David Hosteller is one of several creative artist-teachers on the Ohio University faculty. Here and on the following four pages, The Alumnus presents three views of the Athens sculptor and his work — the first, that of a student journalist; the second, a tribute from photographer Yousuf Karsh; and the third, a visit to the opening of a Hosteller-Karsh exhibition.

Seeking the Essence of Woman...

by Lois Siegel, '68

WOMAN TO ME is the ideal form, erotic yet pure, compositionally variable yet identical every time—a form that suits my purpose."

David Hosteller, MFA '49, focuses his life around women. Professor of sculpture at Ohio University, Hosteller spends his time trying to capture the female image in wood.

"For me, woman is the thing . . . my thing—my meditation," he says. "I know I can spend the rest of my life looking, and I may never fully see . . . never tap the depth of what is woman."

Hosteller's women are ageless goddesses, angular, sensual, stylized; but always filled with grace and vitality. They show no symbols of age. Wrinkles, meaningless details, have been stripped away.

"I'm not after all the detail," he adds. "What I'm trying to do is remove what I feel is an unnecessary adornment—to get to the so-called essence."

"I think any artist is looking for the essence of a particular experience."

Hosteller roams the right side of the continent with shows in galleries of every size. Some of his women sell for prices as high as $2,500.

Born in Beach City (Stark County) in 1926, Hostetler springs from Amish ancestry.

"Anyone who has a root source—whatever nationality, whatever religion, it has some power and some structure in what he is," he says.

In the beginning, he worked with every form, every media of sculpture, but finally, after seeking back into his own past, he found the organic material wood.

First he worked on images of his own family—how they would appear in an ancestral setting. Then he moved to Coolville Ridge in Athens, a 75-acre farm, with a wife, three children, an art studio, elm trees and cows.

"All life stens from the earth," Hostetler insists. "I didn't see it until I moved away from the affluent to something the Amish recognized, still recognize . . . that life does not swing just from acquiring money—acquisition is not the end."

That particular uncluttering of one's life, Hostetler explains, also becomes apparent in one's art.

"I very much believe that where you are is what you are. So for me, some form of meditation with the land is all important to what I am trying to say in art."

Like his ancestors, Hostetler likes most what he found in the Amish—the simplicity of life.

"We're all part of one system—you choose the forms you want—that's your choice. You find that thing you can become one with, and then that thing and your life become inseparable.

"At this particular point in my life, I'm concerned with the beauty I see in human beings, and so I don't center my attention on the sad, the sick, whatever that image may be, I center it on the germinal, rebirth idea, and that is woman.

"In the male-female thing, I deem woman the strong one. Not like the president control role, but the spiritual one. Women don't have to prove themselves—they have built-in fulfillment."

By communicating woman's beauty, Hostetler also believes he saves it. "When I look at a woman, what I see is different than what you see or what somebody else sees because I'm tuned in with what I'm looking for, which becomes uniquely and personally mine.

"So when I look at chicks, they're loaded with many things. The fluidity of hair, the beautiful and soft feline, linear thing. . . . If one looks and looks and looks, the same fine, slinky, sensual quality—it's part of woman, not all of woman, but part, to me transposed in a piece and to this particular image.

"Through the image, I exhibit my own concern for maleness—in counterpoint—through woman. It's a way to find my own head. By finding the essence of woman, at the same time I find the essence of myself."

At any rate, Hostetler's women are mesmerizing the Midwest—and beyond.

As artist, Hostetler transposes his concerns with the world into sculpture. In this way, he communicates his ideas in his own language.

LOIS SIEGEL'S articles and photographs have appeared in the Ohio University Post, the student daily, and in Sunday magazine supplements throughout Ohio. Her story on David Hostetler's women is reprinted here with permission of the Akron Beacon Journal Sunday Magazine, where it first appeared.

Miss Siegel received the bachelor of science in journalism in June of this year, and she currently is working toward a master's degree on the Athens campus. She has traveled in Europe and she spent this past summer studying French at McGill University in Canada.

‘...a gifted teacher and a fine human being’

by Yousuf Karsh

MANY LINKS OF FRIENDSHIP have brought me into the stimulating family of Ohio University. Soon after Vernon Alden was appointed president of Ohio University, I was invited to Athens as a member of the Fine Arts Visiting Committee.

One of the people I met on the occasion of my first Athens visit was a gifted teacher and a fine human being, the sculptor David Hostetler. At once, I was drawn to his calm and sincere manner and his quiet dedication to his work. He took me out to his farm and studio, and I was introduced to his sculpture, his “women.”

Right then and there, I decided I wanted to photograph him in his own environment with his “women,” for his original approach to his work, the result of many years of slowly defining his own artistic idiom, impressed me. That he literally worked from the earth, that his “women” were created from the elm trees which grew on his farm, delighted me. His reverence for, and glory in, woman, his diversified interpretations of her, were compelling. Immediately, we see the goddess, the seductress, the vulnerable creature, the helpmate—indeed, everything that is woman.

I decided to photograph the artist and his women in their natural setting, and we progressed, in easy stages, from the barn to the studio, to the pasture, to the edge of the pond on his property. So I went with David’s women as far as I could—as far as they would let me—to the very brink of the water.

It was a cold and windy March weekend, but as we worked together, each piece of sculpture became more distinct to me as a separate personality, and soon, they were huddling together speaking intimately to David, bracing themselves against the wind, or joining him in a relaxed gambol near a favorite tree or in striking stances near the coal pile. I was oblivious to the cold and the wind.

June Hostetler, David’s wife, discovered that not only was she playing hostess to my wife and me but also to the suddenly appearing young volunteer photographic assistants who materialized on Coolville Ridge, armed with windbreakers and cameras.

It was a memorable few days and helped strengthen our fast-growing friendship.

YOUSUF KARSH has photographed most of the international figures of our time, and the Karsh of Ottawa credit has appeared in the world’s most prestigious magazines. Since 1967 Karsh has been a visiting professor of photography at Ohio and Mrs. Karsh has been a research fellow in special programs and fine arts. Among Karsh’s published collections are Faces of Destiny, This Is the Mass and Portraits of Greatness.

THE SCULPTOR and the photographer share the spotlight with one of Hostetler's bronze women during a photography session before the reception.

AMERICAN ELM from his farm is Hostetler's medium and most of the pieces in the show were wood sculptures from "The American Woman" series. The show also included bronzes cast from the wood sculpture.

THE BLACK TIE reception Sunday evening, March 17, honored the David Hostetlers and the Yousuf Karshes, but the interest was focused primarily on Hostetler's sculptured women of wood and bronze and on Karsh's photographic studies of the sculptor and his work.

The setting was the Harmon Gallery, owned by Foster Harmon, '36, in Naples, Fla., and among the guests present for the formal opening of the two-week exhibition were Ohio University alumni from throughout south Florida and art patrons from Naples and the surrounding area.

Following the reception, President Vernon R. Alden was host for a dinner in the artists' honor. Other guests from the University who were on hand for the opening and the dinner included Dean and Mrs. Jack Morrison of the College of Fine Arts; Alumni Association Director Jack G. Ellis, '57; Dr. Jack J. Holder, former executive director of The Ohio University Fund, Inc., and Max A. Schaible, editor of The Ohio Alumnus.

The Hostetler-Karsh exhibition moved from Naples to Sarasota in June for a two-week display at the Oehlschlaeger Galleries, also operated by Harmon.

Hostetler's women and Karsh's photographs currently are in Boston, where they will remain through Oct. 29 at the Edna Hibbel Gallery. Members of the Massachusetts alumni chapter attended the Boston opening Tuesday, Oct. 8. Ohio alumni in the New York area will have an opportunity to see the show in the spring when the joint exhibition opens a three-week run April 7 in Manhattan's Hall of Art.

Green and White Gridiron Chronicle: From 1949 to 1967

by Dr. Gordon K. Murphy, '61

AN ACCOUNT of a particular university's football record over an 18-year period will prove of scant interest to many. After all, there are more serious and pressing matters. Even those alumni who follow college football closely during their four university years will, in most cases, soon have lost contact with and interest in it, perhaps returning only for Homecoming now and then, or reading an occasional story or score in the fall papers.

Yet, there are some who learn football from childhood largely through attending a particular university's games, suffering with its teams on the radio and eagerly reexperiencing each Saturday's game in the next morning's paper. Of this minority, a few continue this close association through high school and college, never missing a game, and acquiring increasing familiarity and identification with the football program as they and it mature in their own ways. Finally, there are those such as myself who, even though years removed from the campus and the stadium, can hardly wait to read the summer's first football "preview" magazine, listen with beating heart to the Saturday TV football scores and scan the long columns of Sunday football scores looking for a certain name.

To such a devotee the ups and downs of a university football program over the years have real meaning. This comes not only in statistics, in games won and lost, but in watching the growth and excitement of football parallel that of the university itself. Of course, the place of football in the college setting has been and will be long debated. I do not propose to renew this debate here. Let it suffice to say that the key moments of years of football do find their place in the memories of those who follow closely the game's drama and heartbreak.

Here, then, are those moments and trends in Ohio University football since 1949 which have so affected me. The chronicle of postwar Ohio University football falls quite naturally into three-year periods, each with its own theme and atmosphere.

1949-1951 — "Learning" — (15-12-2)

Ohio University football began for me in 1949. The glory days of the 20s and 30s and the mediocrity of the war years were in the dim past as Carroll Widdoes, newly arrived from his Ohio State assistantship to the much-discussed Paul Brown, prepared to lead the Bobcats out of the football wilderness. The season-opening, 17-7 upset win over West Virginia was a satisfying one, but more groundwork had to be laid and lessons painfully learned before the Bobcats would be winners over an entire season.

Miami—the word evokes strong and often bitter memories in the mind of the OU fan. I can remember gloomily watching Jim "Boxcar" Bailey, a dark destroyer in red, ripping the OU defense with long touchdown runs in mid-October, 1950, for a 28-0 Redskins halftime lead. But the Bobcats' spirited second-half comeback made it a 28-20 final. There was always "next year," and the first winning season under Widdoes gave ample promise of more to come.

Four 1951 wins and, again—Miami! I remember sitting at home by the radio and experiencing the growing, almost unbearable tension of an OU-Miami game still tied, 0-0, late in the final period. The Bobcats, touchdown-bound, fumble, and white-clad Miamians clutch the precious ball. Then it is the Redskins who are driving inexorably for the goal. With seconds left, John Pont dives across the final stripe. This loss, ruining an entire season, set a sinister pattern for several future years. Even the following week's 28-27 thriller over Kent, with Dick Fleitz's long break-away the highlight, did not redeem the season as it ended in the bone-chilling gloom of an Ohio stadium loss to Eastern Kentucky and a tie at Marshall. But the winning habit had nonetheless been established.

1952-1954 — "Winning" — (18-7-2)

Remember Gene Weatherholt? Undoubtedly you don't. His one and only OU field goal gave the Bobcats an early 1952 win over Toledo. It was another "good year," but with Miami and an MAC trophy still over the horizon.

I can recall a picture of Carroll Widdoes being carried off Miami Field after the 7-7 tie that, in effect, assured Ohio of its first MAC crown in 1953. Guard

Bob Penrod is supporting the coach's right leg, and Penrod's wide, toothless grin mirrored the more cosmetically pleasing ones of most Ohioans. But there is also the disturbing memory of the puzzling, 9-6 loss to a mediocre Marshall team in Huntington on the season's last day. It was fortunate that the Herd did not join the MAC for football until the next season.

Erland Ahlberg, fleet and elusive as a deer, sparked Ohio to four early and two season-ending wins in 1954. But Miami and Ara Parseghian for a year had nurtured long and bitter memories and before a record Ohio Homecoming crowd gained their resultant, brutal revenge by a 46-13 count.

1955-1957 — "Dying" — (9-17-1)

The Widdoesmen continued victorious in early 1955. The winning tradition seemed well established. Then, blue and gold-clad Kent Flashes fell on their onside kick which opened the 1955 Homecoming at Athens, and when the long, grey afternoon was over they and Trevor Rees, holding their own unpleasant memories of 1954, had their revenge also. From that moment on, Ohio University football slid from vigorous life to dismal death, at first slowly, and then with ever-increasing rapidity. The progressive decline of Ohio power would coincide with the accelerated rebirth of Bowling Green gridiron might under Doyt Perry.

1956's opening, 47-7 defeat by Florida State was stunning, but the next week's loss to Toledo, the Rockets' only win of the year, in retrospect sounded the death knell for Widdoes' program.

Working with comparatively scanty material and depth, Widdoes then adapted Tom Nugent's devastating Florida State "I" formation to his own system, with late-season success. The Bobcats did not lack courage and determination, but something else was lacking. Others in the MAC were passing the Bobcats by. The long fall weeks ended with a depressing 2-7-0 slate.

Indiana (Pa.) State scouts stood in the top row of the Ohio stadium's east stands during an early September Saturday morning scrimmage in 1957, scouting for the only time the recently scheduled OU Bobcats. The few facts and names that I, a compassionate OU fan, gave to them helped them not a bit in their next week's 50-0 loss. This hollow OU victory opened another season just as hollow and disappointing in its results and implications. When the last long, cold November afternoon was at an end, Carroll Widdoes walked from the field for the last time in the gloom of Louisville's Kentucky Fairgrounds Stadium. Under him, now, Ohio football had come full circle.

1958-1960 — "Excelling" — (22-6-0)

The salvation of OU football was already on campus, first in the persons of outstanding freshmen recruited by Widdoes. There then arrived soon after jovial, rotund, dynamic Bill Hess, also from Ohio State and Woody Hayes and eager to remake Ohio football largely in their image. He received a tumultuous and heartwarming welcome at a winter basketball game. The following fall Miami was once again fought on even terms, and this time an OU coach was carried from the field after the Louisville finale.

1959, a familiar pattern. Four wins and then the sudden, dismal, almost impossible-to-accept reality of a humiliating loss to Miami in the Oxford rain and mud. But Hess, his staff and Grecni, Wagner, Brooks and Dean were learning and building.

The culmination came in 1960. The years of frustration and Mid-American mediocrity were swept away in the tumult following the long-awaited triumph over Miami. When the key, win-or-else game with Bowling Green was a reality in late November, it was this time the Bobcats who returned home victorious. A national "Small College" championship was frosting on the cake, and once again Ohioans rejoiced in their football favorites.

1961-1963 — "Persevering" — (19-10-1)

Next fall it was back to earth and a "good" season instead of an outstanding one. Perhaps the highlight was Jim McKee's long, last-second field goal, still in the air as the gun sounded, which defeated Delaware 17-16.

Then in 1962 Hess' own recruits won early games, put up a stout defense to stop Miami, earlier victors over Purdue, and rolled to an 8-2 season. The 7-6 loss to Bowling Green, when McKee's extra point attempt was blocked, was bitter medicine, as was the 15-14 Sun Bowl defeat by West Texas State.

Early losses to Buffalo, Toledo and Delaware preceded the Bobcats' visit to Miami Field in October, 1963. But again, the newly found mastery over the Redskins was proven on the gridiron. This sparked the late-season surge which gave Hess and his troops their second MAC crown, one even more to be prized than that of 1960 because of the sustained effort under pressure which earned it.

1964-1966 — "Struggling" — (10-19-1)

I feel that 1964 must rank with 1951 and 1955 as disappointing seasons which sorely tried the football souls of OU coaches, teams and fans alike. After good early season showings the 1964 team, boasting numerous sterling individual players but without a steady quarterback and that indefinable "something" of the true winner, fell to mediocre Western Michigan and Marshall. After it was all over, six Bobcats had been named to first-team MAC positions, but these trophies had a somewhat brassy glint.

Ten consecutive losses are discouraging on paper, but staggering and enervating to the coaches and players who have planned, worked, practiced and played during the long hours from September until late November. Building bodies and character is important, but even an occasional win makes the building process much more enjoyable. In 1965 Ohio football had again fallen, this time more suddenly, into the depths. How soon would it rise again?

It would rise in one year's time. In the same Boston where Hess' 1960 champions had punished Boston University, the 1966 team stunned Boston College to end the 12-game losing streak. There were new names now, like Conley, Biggs, Carmon, Houmard. The slogging ground troops of Hess' early years had been supplemented by the air force and "the bomb," but the winning spirit was the same. This team would lose five games, but it was on the way back.

The 1967 season appropriately ended another cycle in postwar Ohio University football, and at the same time began another with bright prospects for 1968. The MAC championship tie, attained after an unusual forfeit by Kent State, was a satisfying one for Hess, the team and its followers. Miami's coach Bo Schembechler, munching on sour grapes, might decry OU's claim to any portion of the crown, bleating "Toledo won it on the field." But the Bobcats had, after all, also won it "on the field," by being the only team to defeat Toledo in combat.

Peden Stadium is much the same as in 1949, though the crowds are gratifyingly larger. The Bobcats' uniforms are still green and white. But Ohio University is larger, more dynamic and looking to the future. There are still familiar names on the football schedule but Indiana State, Morris Harvey and Youngstown have been replaced by Penn State, Minnesota and Kansas. Bill Hess and his staff have compiled ten fruitful seasons at Athens, but still the behind-the-scenes tasks of recruiting, planning, scouting and agonizing culminate in the colorful spectacle each fall Saturday in Athens, Oxford, Kalamazoo or University Park.

Whether the seasons to come end in triumph, mediocrity or despair, the very human drama of college football and its parallel relationship to the drama of a great university will continue to absorb and excite me and its other devoted followers.

DR. GORDON K. MURPHY, '61, began his "extracurricular career" as a Bobcat observer in the fourth grade when his father, Dr. Paul R. Murphy, professor of classical languages, joined the Ohio University faculty and the family moved to Athens.

He didn't miss a home football game from 1948 through 1960, and on Saturday afternoons when the Bobcats were out of town, he stayed close to his radio.

Dr. Murphy received the MD degree in 1965 from the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine and spent the following year as an intern at the University of Iowa Hospital in Iowa City.

For the past two years he has been an Air Force medical officer assigned to Glasgow Air Force Base in Montana. This fall Dr. Murphy, his wife, Maureen, and their year-old son, Kristen, returned to Ohio where Dr. Murphy is a resident in pathology at Miami Valley Hospital in Dayton. He hopes to be able to see the Bobcats in action again from time to time now that he's returned to the Buckeye State.

Hess's Bobcats Favored For MAC Championship

by Rowland Congdon, '49

SPEED . . . offense . . . speed. That was the optimistic emphasis of Ohio University football coach Bill Hess in late August as he talked about his 11th Bobcat team to newsmen at the annual press photo day.

Depth . . . defense . . . depth. That was the pessimistic emphasis of the dean of Mid-American Conference coaches.

"This team has more overall speed than any we've ever had," commented Hess. "With it," he added, "we can go wide and throw the ball more than we ever did."

Hess cited his depth problems as "short in the offensive line and in the secondary."

Because of the depth problems, suffered incidentally by all Mid-American Conference schools due to limited scholarship aid, "you have to be lucky injury-wise to go through undefeated in this league," Hess pointed out.

Hess sent his 62 returnees through drills without pads twice the last two days of August and again on Sept. 2 under new NCAA regulations established this year for all member schools.

He put them through the paces beginning Sept. 3 in full regalia for two drills a day through Saturday, Sept. 14, prior to tapering off for the home opener Saturday, Sept. 21, against Marshall.

ROWLAND CONGDON, sports editor of The Athens Messenger since 1963, was sports information director at Ohio for nine years. His interest in the Bobcats dates back to his freshman year in college.

"We can start earlier by practicing without pads. I think it's a good rule. It was established hoping that teams will get in better condition before they start the heavy going," admitted Hess. However, he feels his squad wouldn't have needed the "conditioning" work.

"I'm very pleased with the condition in which our team returned," the coach continued. "You know, I really like this group. I like to be around them. This team has a personality, they live well together."

He praised the "excellent leadership" of co-captains Frank Peters and Ken Carmon, both offensive tackles, in the squad's fine conditioning. "We have great morale and the attitude is excellent."

The 62-man squad consists of 23 lettermen, 19 seniors, 20 juniors and 23 sophomores.

The Bobcats are picked to win the Mid-American crown this year after sharing the title with Toledo last season.

And this doesn't seem to faze Hess in the least. He seems more optimistic than ever, and rightly so. "Our biggest asset," he keeps emphasizing, "is the quality of the people we have at the skill positions." These he points out as quarterback, split end, fullback and tailback.

Cleve Bryant and Todd Snyder hold down the first two spots with Dave LeVeck, Bob Houmard and Dick Conley battling for the other two spots.

Hess actually bubbles when he talks about Houmard. The big lad from Orrville has shown spurts of brilliance in his first two seasons but has been slowed by knee injuries.

"He came back 20 pounds lighter, the best shape he's ever been in with us," Hess exuded. Weighing in at 218, Houmard ran the mile in 5:43 and "then paced all the others while they were running their miles," the coach mentioned.

Bryant, who as a sophomore starter set six Bobcat passing records, caused some concern to the coaching staff in the spring when he came up with injured knee cartilage. It caused him to miss about one week of practice and forced removal of the cartilage in an operation, but Hess says the knee "seems to be 100 per cent okay now."

All Bryant needs is "more accuracy in his passing" to be a great quarterback, the coach feels. He's already the fastest man on the team, with the possible exception of Harvey Mitchell, sophomore flanker back.

Hess feels he has adequate back-up protection for Bryant if anything should happen to the 170-pound Canton junior. Steve Skiver, 170-pound sophomore from Toledo St. Francis, has a lot of poise according to the coach, but he's more of a passing quarterback than a runner.

Hess thinks Mitchell can take pressure off Snyder's passing ability ("they'll have to double-team Todd to stop him," says the coach) if he can gain proper pass-catching experience.

Also, Conley and LeVeck can pass, which gives added threats from that standpoint.

Snyder may be the only Bobcat to play a dual role. Besides his offensive abilities as split end, he'll be used as a safety or right halfback on pass defense when "we're in trouble," Hess remarked.

Hess said the former Athens athlete came back in "real fine condition. He has good speed and hands and is an excellent receiver." Todd set two pass receiving marks last season that were school records.

OHIO UNIVERSITY'S accelerated building program will receive a vital financial boost Nov. 5 if voters approve a bipartisan proposal to amend the state constitution.

It is expected that the amendment, State Issue One, will provide $1.7 million to help Ohio University complete its high priority building projects under way or scheduled.

State Issue One would amend Article VIII of the Ohio Constitution, which prohibits the state government from borrowing funds for useful projects.

The amendment would permit the General Assembly to enact legislation authorizing the issuance of revenue bonds which are not tax supported for capital improvements in mental hygiene, parks and recreation, and water pollution, in addition to higher education. It would also permit the State of Ohio through its regular branches of government to borrow funds for highway construction.

The constitutional amendment provides that no general property tax and no income tax can be levied to pay for these capital improvements. It is anticipated that current general fund revenues or current capital improvements funds will be sufficient to meet debt service requirements. Current highway taxes, not new taxes, will be used to meet the debt service appropriations for highway bonds.

State Issue One:

VOTERS' SUPPORT VITAL

Ohio University administrators use two earlier bond issues, approved by voters in 1963 and 1965, to illustrate the importance of State Issue One. The two issues provided the University with approximately $25 million, augmented by federal funds, for construction to permit the University to keep pace with its rapidly growing student enrollment. State Issue One will perform the same crucial function, administrators say.

The first projects aided by the passage of the earlier bond issues were the Clippinger Graduate Research Laboratories and the accelerator building, both completed in September, 1967, at a cost of $4.8 million.

Bond issue funds amounted to $3.3 million for the two structures. The federal government provided additional funds.

Funds from the previous two bond issues are aiding the University in three major projects now under way. They are the new library; the $4.1 million educational radio-television and speech communications building; and the $2.6 million music school building. Some federal support assists the projects.

Phase I of the library building is expected to be completed this December. Phase II, involving construction of an additional two wings, will be started as "soon as possible."

Additional bond funds from the 1963 and the 1965 issues, plus federal aid, will be used to begin construction in the near future of a $2.6 mathematics building, according to Dr. Robert L. Savage, vice president for research and industrial liaison.

The University's branch campuses also have greatly benefited from the 1963 and 1965 bond issues, receiving $10.1 million for construction of five new buildings. The federal government provided $650,000 and residents of some of the areas involved raised additional funds.

Work began on the $2.1 million Chillicothe campus building in September, 1965. It was completed in December, 1966.

The Zanesville campus structure was started in October, 1965, and completed in January, 1967, at a cost of $2.1 million.

Portsmouth got its branch building in April, 1967, at a cost of approximately $2 million. Work got under way in November, 1965.

Construction began in January, 1966, on the Belmont County facility and was completed in April, 1967, at a cost of $2.1 million.

The building at Lancaster was started in April, 1967, and was completed in August, 1968, at a cost of about $2.3 million.

President Vernon R. Alden has vigorously endorsed State Issue One and urged its support. Dr. Alden said passage of the issue is of utmost importance if Ohio University and other state-assisted universities are to continue their growth in capital construction and academic quality.

Dr. Taylor Culbert, faculty-administration planning committee chairman and dean of the Graduate College, said the need for new research facilities is high on the priority list. These include animal and botanical research laboratories.

There is also need for major changes of some existing buildings such as Chubb Library, Dr. Culbert says. Also, plans are being formulated to render usable for academic instead of industrial purposes buildings and real estate valued at between $4 and $5 million presented to the University by the McBee Systems Division of Litton Industries.

"We have a pressing need for construction funds," Dr. Culbert says. "Favorable action by the people of Ohio in November is of vital importance."

Approval of the two earlier bond issues resulted in $320 million being spent across Ohio for higher education improvements.

State Issue One, which has been endorsed by both political parties, the AFL-CIO and many other organizations, establishes certain borrowing limitations.

These limitations are $500 million for highway construction, including $250 million for elimination of urban bottlenecks; $120 million for water pollution control; $100 million for higher, vocational, and technical education, and juvenile rehabilitation; $20 million for parks and recreational improvements; and $19 million for airports, a police-fire training academy and other state buildings.

BOND ISSUES in 1963 and '65 provided nearly $25 million for University construction. The Lancaster building, left, was completed in August. Phase I of the new library at Athens, right, will be completed in December.

President Alden Accepts Position With Boston Investment Firm

In a surprise announcement Thursday, Sept. 12, the man who has led Ohio University for the past seven years informed the Board of Trustees he will resign at the end of the 1968-69 academic year.

Vernon R. Alden, who came to the Athens campus in January of 1962 as the University's 15th president, will become chairman of the board and chief executive officer of The Boston Co., Inc., and its principal subsidiary, the Boston Safe Deposit and Trust Co., Jan. 1.

Alden will continue as president of the University until June to allow time for the selection of his successor.

The Boston Co. is a financial holding company whose 15 subsidiaries in this country and abroad specialize in the management of capital. The company's component firms supervise investment assets valued at more than $3 billion.

The company includes an organization which manages university endowment funds, a mutual fund, investment counseling and economic advisory firms, and a management consulting firm which operates internationally.

President Alden has been a director of The Boston Co. since its founding and a director of the century-old Boston Safe Deposit and Trust Co. since 1959. He has been a member of the trust company's executive committee since 1960. He also is a director of the Mead Corp., the Kendall Co. and the Digital Equipment Corp., and he has served as a special consultant to the Xerox Corp.

Before becoming president of

President Vernon R. Alden

Ohio University, Alden was associate dean of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration, where he worked for 12 years.

Concerning Alden's role in his new post, William W. Wolbach, president of The Boston Co. and Boston Safe, said, "Dr. Alden will give special attention to new areas of diversification and opportunities for growth and service that relate to our evolving activities as managers of capital and advisers to management. He will also share with me other management responsibilities in planning the continuing evolution of The Boston Co."

Wolbach said that ever since Alden left Boston for Ohio, it had been his personal ambition to bring him back—"both to the Greater Boston community and into our companies."

Commenting on his decision to return to Boston, President Alden said, "The Boston Co. has the resources, the personnel and the experience to be of major service to a wide range of institutions in our society. I'm challenged by the opportunity which my new position will offer—the opportunity to build upon my experiences in education, in business and in international affairs."

"My decision to leave Ohio University, after seven of the most exciting and satisfying years of my life, is based upon this unusual opportunity in Boston and my awareness that the optimal long-term growth of institutions is in cycles of development, with each stage calling for different qualities of leadership."

The past seven years at the University, Alden continued, "have been marked by rapid growth and change and movement into new areas of service and commitment. I believe we are at a turning point and that the University can best continue its growth to total commitment if the trustees have the opportunity to assess the present achievement, set new goals and priorities and select a new president for the next period which I am sure will be one of great service to the young people of Ohio."

Dedication to Service

President Alden went on to discuss the "special kind of spirit and dedication to service at Ohio University" which was in the institution when his distinguished predecessor, Dr. John Calhoun Baker, passed his mantle on to him.

"I have tried to nourish this spirit, build upon it and keep it contemporary with fast moving times. The task has been rewarding because of the wonderful people among the University's trustees, faculty, administration, nonacademic employees and students whose hopes and dreams I have shared."

Fred H. Johnson, '22, chairman of the University Board of Trustees, said he had known that several universities, business corporations and government agencies had tried to attract President Alden during the past seven years.

"I have also been aware that at some time there would be an opportunity which he felt he could not possibly turn down. I fully appreciate the fact that this prestigious position in Boston fits this category," Johnson continued.

"Speaking for the entire board, I wish to express our keen regret that Dr. Alden will be leaving us at the end of the academic year. Under his leadership these past seven years we have experienced the greatest growth and improvement in quality in Ohio University's long and distinguished history. I know it will be difficult to find a person to fill Dr. Alden's leadership position at the University and in southeastern Ohio."

Enrollment Increases

Since Alden's arrival in January 1962, enrollment at the University has jumped from 10,800 to approximately 22,500 this fall quarter. On the Athens campus the number of undergraduates has more than doubled—8,404 to 17,300, and enrollment has nearly trebled—from 1,918 to 5,200—on the five new campuses. Graduate enrollment has increased nearly fourfold from 477 to 1,700.

Full-time faculty appointments have risen from 341 to 736 in the past seven years, and the change in faculty salaries has been almost equally dramatic. What were maximum salaries at the associate and full professor levels in 1962 are in 1968 minimum salaries. Maximum salaries for full professors are today $29,700, for associate professors, $19,000, and for assistant professors, $16,300.

The University's current operating budget reflects the enrollment growth, the new salary levels and the increased costs of operating a large physical plant and an expanded academic program. In 1962 the University budget was just under $13 million. For the current fiscal year, it is more than $49 million.

While income and expenses have risen sharply, the University's assets also have multiplied during Alden's tenure. Physical assets have increased threefold, from $40.5 million to $120.5 million.

Construction of academic buildings and residence halls has totaled more than $83 million since 1962, and the University currently is in the midst of a ten-year, $205 million building program.

Alden's years at Ohio University have been characterized not only by expansion but also by innovation and experimentation. Special academic programs have been instituted to offer specific courses and opportunities to the particularly able student, the potential leader and the student whose needs cannot be met inside existing University programs.

The key to the new programs has been student involvement, including participation in curriculum planning as a part of the learning experience.

Graduate Expansion

Academic offerings have expanded most notably at the graduate level and in the new College of Communication established last May. Six PhD programs were offered when Alden arrived at the University, and today there are 15.

Research has paralleled the growth in graduate programs. Research support totaling $317,103 in 1962 has swelled annually with more than $6 million received in federal and industrial grants in the past six years.

President Alden has backed up innovative programs for students with a creative approach to the problems of southeastern Ohio. To encourage area development, he has provided leadership in obtaining improved highways, flood control projects, a new regional hospital and a regional airport.

Two University-operated, federally funded institutes service the Appalachian region. The Institute for Regional Development, which offers community services, and the Development Planning Institute, which aids in community, recreation and natural resource planning, have both been established since 1964.

Overseas Programs

From a single educational assistance program in Western Nigeria, the University under Alden's leadership has expanded its overseas commitment to two additional programs in Northern Nigeria and one in Vietnam. Support for the programs comes from the Ford Foundation and the U. S. Agency for International Development.

Alden's accomplishments of the past seven years have attracted attention throughout Ohio and the nation. Feature articles on Alden and the University have appeared in Life, Time, Newsweek and the Wall Street Journal.

President Alden was appointed in 1964 by President Lyndon Johnson as chairman of the Task Force Committee planning the U. S. Job Corps, and he assisted Sargent Shriver on a part-time basis for six months.

A native of Chicago, Alden received his bachelor's degree from Brown University, where he did honors work in English literature and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa in his junior year. He received the MBA degree from Harvard in 1950. President Alden has been awarded seven honorary doctor's degrees.

Prior to his service at Ohio, he was involved in various teaching and administrative duties at Brown, Northwestern and Harvard. During his 12 years at Harvard, he taught and directed advanced management programs in Japan, Mexico, Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

Fred Johnson Names Five-Man Committee To Begin Search for Ohio's 16th President

The day following President Alden's resignation announcement, Fred H. Johnson, '22, chairman of the University Board of Trustees, appointed five men to begin the search for Alden's successor.

The five-man committee is made up of three members of the Board of Trustees, a faculty member and a representative of the Alumni Association. Two of the trustee members also are alumni of the University.

The chairman of the committee is Joseph B. Hall of Cincinnati, vice chairman of the Board of Trustees and chairman of the board's executive committee. Hall is the retired chairman of the board of The Kroger Co.

Other trustees named to the committee to find the 16th president of the University are Russell P. Herrold, a 1916 graduate of Ohio University, and C. Paul Stocker, a member of the Class of 1926.

Herrold, who lives in Zanesville, is chairman of the First Trust & Savings Bank of Zanesville and a retired vice president of the Anchor Hocking Glass Corp. He holds the MBA degree from Harvard.

Herrold received the Alumni Association Certificate of Merit in 1956, and he was president of the Alumni Association in 1953-54. He is married to the former Wilma Lane, a member of the Ohio University Class of 1918.

Stocker is president of Lorain Products Corp. in Lorain. He received the Alumni Association Certificate of Merit in 1956. Stocker is married to the former Beth Kilpatrick, a 1928 Ohio graduate.

Dr. George H. Lobdell Jr., chairman of the professional relations committee of the University's Faculty Senate, is the faculty representative to the presidential search committee. Dr. Lobdell has been on the Ohio faculty since 1955, and he is chairman of the history department and of the University's military affairs committee.

Johnson has asked Dr. Robert L. Daniel, president of the Faculty Senate, to appoint a six-man advisory committee from within the senate to assist the trustees' committee in the search for a new president. The subcommittee will make recommendations to the committee through Daniel.

The official alumni representative to the committee is Eugene F. Rinta of Washington, D.C., current president of the University Alumni Association.

Rinta, a 1938 graduate of the University, is executive director of the Council of State Chambers of Commerce in Washington. An All-Conference and All-State basketball star at Ohio, Rinta was elected to the University's Athletic Hall of Fame last year.

The committee will meet periodically during the next few months to screen candidates and make recommendations to the Board of Trustees. The final selection of Ohio University's 16th president will be the responsibility of the Board of Trustees, according to Johnson.

Publications Win Five National Awards

Five publications produced by the Office of University Publications received special citations in the Publications Leadership Competition of the American College Public Relations Assn. in Miami Beach in July.

The Ohio University winners were selected from a field of 963 entries submitted by 254 college and universities across the country.

Three publications — Graduate Study in English, The School of Music and Theater at Ohio University — received special citations in the student recruitment category.

The University's fourth citation was awarded in the posters and promotional flyers category for a poster entitled "Study in Mexico." The fifth award winner was a mailer, "This is a university library?," sent to parents of all Ohio University students.

ALUMNI REPORT

VIETNAM VOLUNTEER

Elbert Brown, '66, returned to the United States last April from an experience which he says he will never forget: 365 days in Vietnam serving as a friend and counselor to hundreds of American soldiers.

He went to Vietnam as an assistant field director for the American Red Cross in the area of service to military installations. "The fact that I chose to work for the Red Cross in order to go to Vietnam," he says, "makes my going voluntary. I wanted to know what it was all about. I like to work with people. There I knew I would have that opportunity."

"When I arrived in Vietnam people said, 'Don't count your days or the time will drag.' Well, I started counting mine when I had 365 to go and I counted them right down until I had only one. Contrary to what I was told, the time went fast. I enjoyed every minute of my experience."

Brown was stationed with the 1st Marine Division in Da Nang for six months and 20 days and later at the U.S. Army Headquarters 15 miles northeast of Saigon for five months and ten days. During that time he was directly responsible for arranging emergency financial assistance for servicemen.

"A man may be caught without enough money to travel home in case of sickness or death in his family. The Red Cross arranges loans for travel expenses and provides communications between him and his family."

Personal counseling was an equally important aspect, if not the most gratifying part, of his job.

AFTER the Athens flood last spring, Brown, '66, spent three weeks in the area interviewing stricken families.

"There are so many things you do for service people," he remarks, "you get satisfaction out of it yourself. A serviceman is more than 12,000 miles from the States. He's lonely, he doesn't like being away from home and he doesn't like being in Vietnam. All of these factors can add up to a great deal of frustration."

"A fellow comes into the office with what he thinks is a problem. You sit down and talk with him and sometimes he realizes it's not such a big problem after all. In a situation like that we're able to help him get things out of his system. At other times his problem isn't so easily solved. I've come into contact with men who have had mental problems, for instance. In cases like that I've made the man's commanding officer aware of the problem and he in turn makes certain the man receives proper psychiatric attention."

Some of these problems are caused by a fear of dying. However, the majority of servicemen, Brown points out, go to Vietnam not thinking they will be killed, but with the idea of getting rid of Charlie. "While I was in Vietnam I didn't think in terms of getting killed; I thought in terms of helping the men."

Since returning from Vietnam, Brown has continued his work with people.

As a national field representative for the ARC, he maintains liaison between 22 chapters of the Red Cross in the Greater Cleveland area and the central headquarters in Alexandria, Va. As a liaison, it is important that he become fully aware of the problems of his area and that he know how to solve them. On-the-job training, therefore, is an important part of his work.

Following the flood in Athens last spring, Brown spent three weeks in southeastern Ohio working as a caseworker with the Red Cross disaster relief team, a staff of about ten professionals and a host of volunteers who helped rehabilitate families who were affected by the flood.

"The experience was very rewarding," he remarked, "because so many people were involved. Working directly in a disaster area is much better than reading about it in pamphlets."

Brown does not intend to make the Red Cross his life-long work. He would like to return to school to do graduate study in history or government. He may teach or he may go into government work. "I feel that people could learn from my experiences."

COLOR TV SERIES

Dr. Tom C. Battin, '35, University of Houston professor in the Department of Communications, is executive director of a unique student-directed and produced color television series. College News Conference, a panel show designed to prompt an air of controversy, gives television majors the rare opportunity of doing color television programs on the air. The series is broadcast every Sunday over KHTV in Houston.

Since the series began in January 1967, the students have produced more than 50 half-hour programs and their guests have included the editor of Newsweek, the British representative to the United Nations, the director of NASA and Andre Previn.

SMIRCINA PROMOTED

John E. Smircina, '53, MA '54, has been named vice president and general manager of Ventron Electronics Corp., Bradford, Pa., manufacturer of diversified chemicals, crystals, instruments and electronic control systems. Prior to joining the firm, he was vice president, operations, for Memcor, Inc., of Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Smircina, a former Air Force officer, has held key executive positions with ITT's Wire and Cable Division, Bogart Manufacturing Corp., Chicago Aerial Industries, Inc. and Guidance Technology, Inc.

NATIONAL PRESIDENT

For the first time in the 106-year history of the Delta Tau Delta chapter at Ohio University, one of its alumni has been elected national president of the fraternity.

He is Robert L. Hartford, '36, executive vice president of Penton Publishing Co., Cleveland. Hartford is well known in industry as the publisher of Machine Design, the world's largest engineering magazine. He is a director of Penton and of the American Business Press.

For more than 20 years Hartford has been a director of the house corporation of the Ohio Delta Tau Delta chapter. His late father, William A. Hartford, '13, was also a member of the fraternity.

ON THE WALL . . .

by Jack G. Ellis, '57, Executive Director
Ohio University Alumni Association

Thank you sometimes seems to be insufficient and perhaps this is one of those times. Nonetheless, your alumni staff here in Athens wishes to warmly "thank" all of you who made this past year a highly successful one.

As we move into our second year, it is rewarding to reflect on the past year's accomplishments, successes and setbacks. Fortunately, through it all and with the mighty cooperative efforts of many alumni, we have seen the chapter organizations triple in growth and number. Bright, fresh ideas were volunteered by you. Trial balloons were sent up; some ruptured and fell, but many were implemented into programs which were received with sparkling enthusiasm.

It is for this help and cooperation we wish to express our sincerest gratitude. Numerically, there are too many to mention individually here, but each of you know your own personal contributions. I hope each of you feel the pride deserved in the knowledge that your performance was of tremendous value to us as well as to Ohio University.

Our second year has already started with the anticipated bang. Programs have been scheduled in Atlanta, Rochester, Buffalo and Pittsburgh. Outstanding events are planned and set in Cleveland, Boston, New York City, Connecticut and Washington, D. C. Alumni activities are being arranged by alumni for each of the away football games at Kent State, Western Michigan, Bowling Green, Cincinnati and the previously publicized "Alumni Adventure" to Williamsburg for the William and Mary contest. These are only the immediate months' activities. Other chapters have plans laid for the winter and spring of which you will be hearing later. You who live in these areas and are not enjoying the full benefits of alumni membership should exercise your right and participate.

The week of August 26 saw us moving into our new offices in Davis Hall, Suite 106. For you old-timers who have not been back recently, Davis is located on the east edge of the old golf course next to Lakeview Center. The golf course is now referred to as "old" because of the construction that has recently started converting it into the new face of the South Green complex. Groundbreaking has just started for 15 new and sorely needed multi-level dormitories, replete with the most modern and convenient facilities. As the South Green unfolds it will become the principal living area of the University, larger than both the East and West Greens combined. It, again, is only one of several projects currently underway to meet the demands of growth here at Ohio.

We would enjoy personally giving you a tour on your next trip to Athens. Make the Alumni Office your headquarters if you wish. You are always welcome and, for the first time in several years, we can say convenient parking facilities are available. So do stop by and let us have the opportunity to personally show our appreciation for your loyal support.

Degreemanship: Four Years' Work Accomplished in Less Than Two

Impatience is a virtue? In John Carl Nash, '68, it is.

He whizzed through a regular four-year academic degree program in less than 17 months and last June, at the age of 19, received the bachelor of arts degree from Ohio University.

In explanation of his unprecedented accomplishment, he says: "Knowledge and education are stimulating but school, per se, bores me. I can't enjoy school at a slow pace."

Nash, a mathematics major, began his brief but impressive University career in February, 1967, when he enrolled for 18 hours of academic work at Ohio University's academic center in Ironton. Completing that work with a 3.5 grade point average, half A's, half B's, he transferred to the main Ohio campus for the 1967 summer session. During the following four quarters he completed the required 181 hours for a bachelor of arts degree in mathematics, 80 of those hours by advanced standing tests. During the spring quarter, he completed 44 hours of course work, his entire senior year.

Even more impressive is the fact that Nash earned a 2.9 accumulative average, one-tenth of a grade point below a B average. In high school he was a C-minus student.

"If I had had to plug through college in the same way I had to in high school," the impatient young scholar remarks, "I would have done just as badly."

Logic is the key to Nash's actions and to the way he learns. He reconstructs ideas, rather than remembering words. "If something fits logically, I'm confident I won't forget it."

He attended few classes, studied for courses on his own and took comprehensive tests over the material, earning A's and B's in such courses as calculus, economics, physics, differential equations and statistics. He completed almost every advanced undergraduate course in mathematics at Ohio University and he took some graduate work.

The humanities, on the other hand, were more difficult for him. He took English, speech and fine arts courses in class where he could listen to the professor. But he took no notes, only listened.

Nash began general graduate study in mathematical theory at Ohio State University this summer. He plans to bypass the master's and work directly on his doctor of philosophy degree. Even though he dislikes formal course work, he says, "I want the PhD badly enough to stick with it." He admits he doesn't know how long it will take him.

This fall Nash began teaching all four years of mathematics at Triad High School in Woodstock, Ohio, where he is the youngest member of the faculty.

What will he do after this year or beyond the doctorate?

"My plans are too general to talk about," Nash says. "I may go into business, among other things. I'm too nervous and too impatient to tie myself down for too long."
